Over-Generous Over the Holidays?

According to experts, about one-fourth of Americans will start the new year with holiday debt. And it's no wonder. In the joy of finally reconnecting with family and friends, budgets often took a back seat.

Fortunately, consolidating holiday debt can save some stress – and sometimes even some money.

One option is using a personal loan to pay off all those bills. Personal loans typically offer lower interest rates than credit cards. Over the long run, that can save money. Also, making just one monthly loan payment can be easier to budget for and keep track of than lots of credit card bills.
